

The University Singers was founded in the academic year 1957/1958 at the then University College of the West Indies (UCWI) which became the UWI in 1962. The Singers have been an icon of the University, celebrating the culture and heritage of the Caribbean region, and beyond, at a consistently excellent standard, even as members have studied, graduated and moved on – many to nurture choirs elsewhere. From a small group that gathered to “make a joyful noise’ in a uniquely pan-Caribbean way, to an established institution which has gained kudos at home and abroad, the University Singers has packed much development into its journey.
